

Hannah Wittman Biography

Dr. Hannah Wittman is Academic Director of the Centre for Sustainable Food Systems at the University of British Columbia and Associate Professor in the Institute for Resources, Environment and Sustainability (IRES). She received her PhD in Development Sociology from Cornell University and conducts community-based research related sustainable food policy and practice, in particular related to food sovereignty, agrarian reform, organic transitions, and farm to school programs. Her work contributes towards a critical discussion of pathways towards agroecology, agrarian citizenship, and health equity in Canada and Latin America. She is an editor for Agronomy for Sustainable Development.